A MESSAGE FROM THE BOARD PRESIDENT: SAME MISSION, EXPANDED SCOPE

Make You Think, Inc. had exciting goals at the beginning of 2020, and our mission of providing adults with accessible opportunities for education was in off to a great start. Our Science on Tap event series continued to thrive after six years of serving the Portland metro area, and plans were in progress to expand to new cities and venues. Our podcast A Scientist Walks Into A Bar was growing, and a new technical support service for other events and conferences was being developed. The strategic goals and tactical plans for 2020 had just been solidified when the COVID pandemic upended everything.

Even before the municipalities locked down, it became clear that our primary product of in-theater events was no longer viable, and our team proactively started planning ways to continue serving our community. By early April we had shifted to weekly online Science on Tap events broadcast via Zoom, Facebook, and YouTube. In addition to new technical challenges, this new event format upended our ticket revenue model and our audience helped us survive through donations. However, the change in services have expanded the community in ways we had not expected – we are continuing to reach people in the Portland Metro area, but we are now reaching an audience across Oregon, across the country, and across the world.

Our Mission:

Supporting programs that provide adults with accessible opportunities for education in science, history, and related areas

Looking Ahead

With uncertainty in the near term, we know the services we've provided have been essential for our audience to keep connected in an unconnected world. While some of our plans have been curtailed, others have developed in ways we did not expect and we are making plans to continue serving our growing online community.

SCIENCE ON TAP

Our flagship science lecture series began the year as usual – with a beer. Based on the “Science Café” model of engaging with adult audiences in informal locations, our in-person events were held in locally-owned theaters that encouraged food and drink service. We held six in-theater events (three in Portland, OR, and three in Vancouver, WA) before pandemic circumstances required a change.

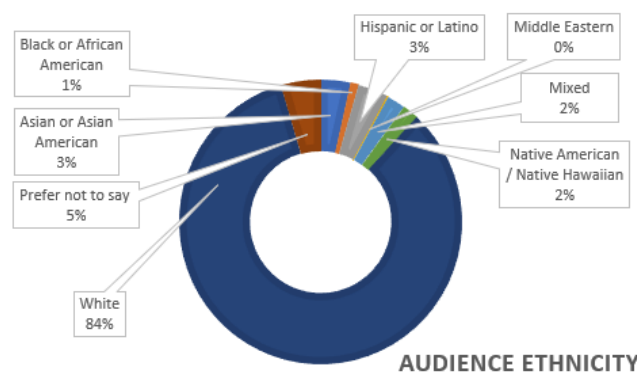

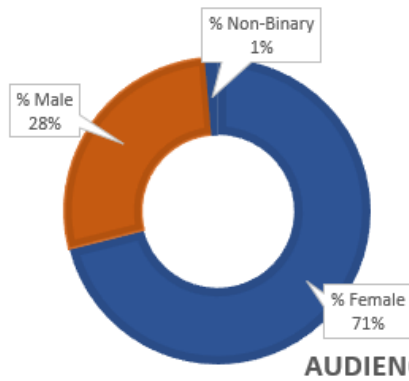

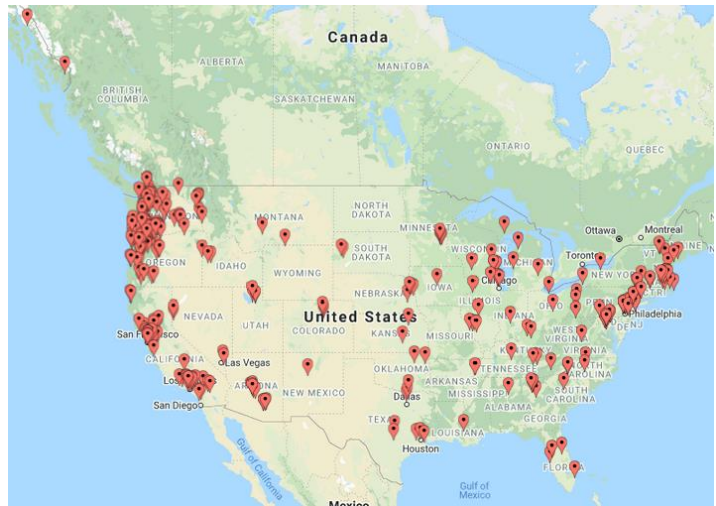

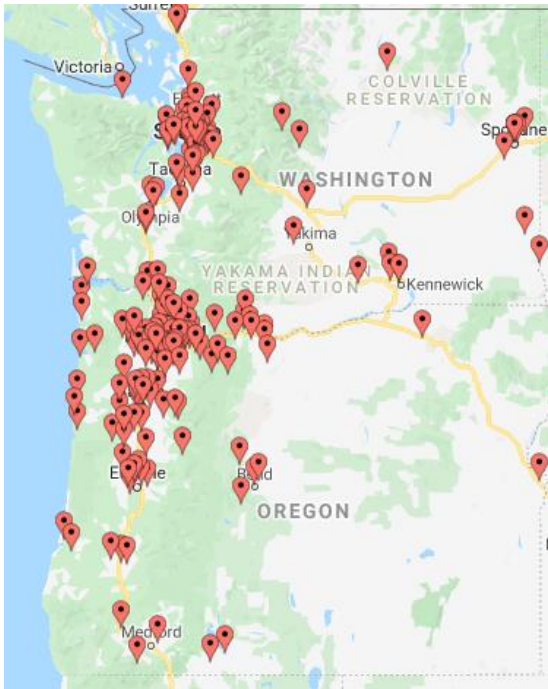

In April we began our series of Science on Tap Online events, which were BYOB by necessity. Much of our existing audience came along and we found a whole new audience in the process. In years past and in those first six events of 2020, our average in-theater audience was 280 people who were able to attend in person in the Portland Metro area. The 26 online events we produced averaged 283 viewing devices, and based on survey data which asked how many people watched per device, the estimated per-event audience was 400 people. In total, we produced 32 Science on Tap events in 2020 with a total of approximately 11,700 in-person and online attendees.

Dr Octavio Choi speaks at Alberta Rose Theater

According to location information provided in the chat and in response to our post-event surveys, our audience blossomed to include viewers well outside of our previous Portland Metro home base. Our online reach included people in 23 counties in Oregon and 19 counties in Washington. We also reached people in 43 additional states, and in 10 other countries. This expanded reach taught us that the demand for quality, accessible science events is high and far-reaching. In 2021, regardless of our ability to resume in-person events, we plan to continue to produce online science education events.

Audience demographic information gathered from participant surveys

Producing Science On Tap Online has also allowed us to identify and promote a more diverse set of speakers - not only regarding topics but also regarding the scientists themselves. We believe that representation matters, and it has long been a priority to feature experts that represent a diversity of genders, races, and ethnicities. This year we were able to include speakers from diverse geographical locations and had speakers present from Arkansas, Arizona, several cities in California, Illinois, Maryland, Montana, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Tennessee, and even from Italy.

We achieved our goal of 50% or more female speakers in 2020 and will continue to actively promote female and non-binary scientists. While we had more success featuring scientists of color in our podcast episodes, we have room to improve the diversity of our Science on Tap speakers. Make You Think, Inc. believes it is essential to showcase scientists from different backgrounds to provide role models, and platforms for diverse voices in science, a field dominated by white cis men.

Speakers	In Theaters	Online	2020 Totals
% Female	43%	56%	59%
% Male	57%	44%	41%
% White	100%	88%	90%
% POC	0%	12%	10%

ASL provided by Fingers Crossed Interpreting

A goal set in early 2020 planning was to feature ASL interpretation at our in-theater events, and we were well on our way of achieving that goal. We provided ASL interpretation at three of our six in-theater events. We were unable to procure the financial resources for real-time interpretation for our online events, though real-time closed captioning is available for viewers on YouTube. We hope to reinstate this service once in-theater events are possible, and we will prioritize seeking funding to increase event accessibility.

We have an active social media presence both to promote our events but also to promote a science-based community. In an effort to encourage continued learning, we share science articles and information for discussion amongst our 7,300 members on Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram.

A SCIENTIST WALKS INTO A BAR

Our podcast "A Scientist Walks Into A Bar" distributed 19 episodes in 2020, which represents an 11% increase from the previous year. Early episodes featured recordings of in-theater events, but in 2020 we diversified our episode format. We had the opportunity for several shorter "preview" episodes which featured interviews several scientists before they appeared on a Science on Tap online event. We also introduced "barstool chat" episodes which featured interviews with scientists showing their more personal side; the goal of these episodes was to humanize and personalize scientists to support our goal of making science more accessible.

EVENT TEAM CONSULTING

Using the expertise gained during years of in-theater Science on Tap events, our team explored additional opportunities for revenue generation by expanding their services to provide technical support, consultation, and direct assistance for other events. The organization Science Talk engaged the Make You Think Inc. Event Team to provide technical planning and onsite support for their multi-day annual conferences in 2018 & 2019. Our team was poised to provide the same service for the conference that was to be held in late March 2020 when that in-person event was cancelled.

The new online format has offered unexpected opportunities for our Event Team to provide technical support. The ReBuilding Center used our Event Team to move all of their construction classes online, and they have been scheduled to assist with the online Science Talk conference in March 2021. Discussion is underway for our Event Team to provide technical support services for two additional science-related conferences in early 2021.

FINANCIAL SUMMARY

The move to online events because of the pandemic changed the Science on Tap balance sheet dramatically. In 2019, Science On Tap revenue primarily came from ticket sales from in-person events. In 2020, we made the decision to provide our online events for free because we recognized so many people were struggling financially and craved some sort of human connection and intellectual stimulation. While we asked for donations at every online event, our own financial health suffered. Expenses included the purchase of new equipment, contractor expenses for podcast production and social media support, and an advanced Zoom subscription to support the popularity of our events (and we may need to purchase an even higher account to accommodate more people wishing to attend our events!).

Starting at our first Science on Tap online event in April 2020 we asked our audience for individual donations to support our programming. We also started a Patreon subscription, and from a start of $0 in April, our Patreon donations ramped up to nearly $1,000 per month in December 2020. These generous donations, however, are not enough to keep us providing events and podcasts. Make You Think Inc. is actively looking for additional means of generating revenue, including applying for grants and seeking corporate sponsorships.

COMMENTS FROM ATTENDEES

Dr. Octavio Choi

"My wife & I attended an in-person event in the past & enjoyed it, but we hope you continue this online format even if/when we eventually make it through this pandemic. The online format is much more accessible & we can actually see the presenter's face & expressions more clearly, leading to a more engaging experience overall."

Dr. Anisa Ramirez

"I hope that these events continue to be broadcast virtually even after covid 19 because they are some of the best science-related webinars I've ever watched and I enjoy them a lot!"

Dr. Jen Gunter

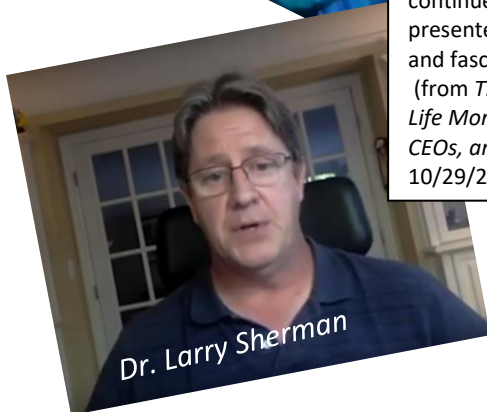

Dr. Nichole Michel

"It felt very direct and accessible. The professionals really know what they're talking about AND THEY ACTUALLY ANSWERED THE QUESTIONS!! The whole pandemic has been wrought with obscure answers and vagueness that just creates more confusion and panic. I feel that these pros actually provided answers (and opinions) that were comprehensive, comprehensible, and valuable. I am now better informed and able to make my own conclusions because I feel I have a better grasp on the information."

"Everything about the experience was easy and extremely worthwhile. You continue to have amazing presenters who address timely and fascinating topics."

Sam Louke, retired chemical engineer, volunteers for Make You Think Inc. regularly as Science on Tap Operations, board member, and on line Q&A monitor. "This has been a great opportunity for me to give back to the community that I've lived in for decades," he says. In addition, any hours or money donated are matched by his former company. Corporate matching is a great way to contribute to Make You Think and increase the resources that support the programs.
